HUMAN ENDOCANNABINOID SYSTEM

For most of history, the effects of cannabis on the human body were little understood. Then, in the 1990's, scientists discovered endocannabinoids, the natural cannabis-like molecules produced by the human body. Scientists began to realize cannabis exerted its effects, in part, by mimicking our endocannabinoids. It appears the main function of the endocannabinoid system is to maintain bodily homeostasis—biological harmony in response to changes in the environment.¹ Taxonomic investigation revealed that the endocannabinoid system is incredibly old, having evolved over 500 million years ago. Moreover, it is present in all vertebrates—mammals, bird, reptiles, amphibians, fish, etc, all produce endocannabinoids!²

Research initially suggested endocannabinoid receptors were only present in the brain and nerves, but scientists later found that the receptors are present throughout the body, including our skin, immune cells, bone, fat tissue, liver, pancreas, skeletal muscle, heart, blood vessels, kidney, and gastrointestinal tract.³ We now know the endocannabinoid system is involved in a wide variety of processes, including pain, memory, mood, appetite, stress, sleep, metabolism, immune function, and reproductive function.^{4,5} Endocannabinoids are arguably one of the most widespread and versatile signaling molecules known to man.

WHAT IS CBD

Cannabidiol or "CBD" is the largest chemical compound in the cannabis/hemp plant that is believed to have a very wide therapeutic potential. Unlike it's cousin tetrahydrocannabinol or THC, it does not have a psychoactive effect.

HOW DOES IT WORK

Our Endocannabinoid System or ECS produces cannabinoids. Like the nervous system and immune system, the ECS has specific duties. It is in charge of regulating homeostasis or maintaining balance in the body by producing your very own cannabinoids. It regulates things like mood, memory, motor control, pain perception, appetite, and sleep, and much more.

Unfortunately, like everything else in the body, the ECS wears out as we age and has trouble maintaining balance. Injury and disease also influence the ECS throwing our bodies even further out of balance. As we age, we run low on cannabinoids and can even become cannabinoid deficient and need our cannabinoids to be replenished. The last time you received cannabinoids was probably from your mother's milk at infancy. However, the cannabis/hemp plant is where cannabinoids are grown. These plant-based cannabinoids naturally stimulate your ECS by giving it replenishment and rebalances your body. No pills, no dangerous chemicals, just a natural reinforcement that the earth gave us. Hydro specializes in providing these products in the purest and natural forms.

Depending on your weight and condition, the daily amount of CBD consumption will vary depending on your goals. Beginners may start with a regimen of 5mg-25mg while others may consume 50mg+ on a daily basis. As always please consult your physician about your goals.

DIFFERENT WAYS TO TAKE HEMP OIL/CBD Consumption Method Below

- ORAL APPLICATORS
Pure hemp oil from oral applicators are taken under the tongue and help for 60 seconds before being swallowed.
- LIQUIDS
CBD hemp oil liquid can be taken by itself or easily blended into food or smoothies for a healthy lifestyle supplement.
- CAPSULES
CBD hemp oil capsules, the perfect daily solution to CBD supplements. Simply mix them in with your existing vitamins and supplements each morning.
- VAPORIZERS
When vaporized, CBD enters the bloodstream more easily and avoids passing through the digestive tract and liver.
- EDIBLES
CBD Edibles are specially designed foods that contain hemp oil such as gummies. Edibles are the easiest forms to receive CBD.
- TOPICALS
CBD Topicals for skin care include: bath bombs, deep moisturizers, anti-aging skin care, and muscle creams.
